Clues to the paternal roots of don Juan de Oñate

José Antonio Esquibel has given us the maternal line, which converted to Catholicism but little has been written on his paternal side.

Most lineages start with Pedro Belza Naharriondo who lived in the first third of the 15th century, Señor de la casa solar de Naharriondo en Oñate, taken from Alberto y Arturo Garcia Carrafa, ENCICLOPEDIA HERALDICA Y GENEALOGICA, Narriondo V. 61 p. 50

If we start at the first paragraph we learn that Pedro Lezcano established this solar (estate) for his descendents, and Pedro Lezcano was descended from don Lope Diaz de Haro, onceno Señor de Viscaya.

In Alberto y Arturo Garcia Carrafa, ENCICLOPEDIA HERALDICA Y GENEALOGICA, Haro V.42 p.265 using Lope Diaz de Haro as a starting place we find he was the 11th Señor of Vizcaya and Alferez Mayor of Castilla, he was called "Cabeza Brava" for his undaunted courage in battle, he was the first Señor de Baeza and held the Señorios of Haro, Alava, Bureba, Nájera, y la Alcaldía de Castilla. His wife was doña Urraca Alonso (hija natural de Alonso IX de León y de Galicia y de doña Inés Iñiguez de Mendoza, y hermana, por lo tanto, del Rey Fernando III (the Saint). he fought with his father in the Crusades, and he died in 1236.

Lope was the son of

X. Diego López de Haro 10th Señor de Soberano de Vizcaya from 1170- 1214. He held the Señorios of Bureba, Valpuesta, Belorado, Grañón, Aguilar de Campóo, Monteagudo, Logroño, Soria, Calahorra y Nájera, and the positions of Merino Mayor de Castilla y Alferez Real. Lope's Mother was Manrique de Lara (hija del Conde don Manrique, Señor de Molina y Mesa y Alferez de Alfonso VII, y de su mujer doña Hermerinda, Vizcondesa de Narbona), Diego's 2nd wife was doña Toda Pérez. Diego López de Haro served as Capitan General in the battle of las Navas de Tolosa which stopped the advance of Islam into the rest of Spain. He was known as "el bueno" or "el malo" depending on which side of the battle they were on.
